Background

Tucked away in a quiet and prestigious corner of the UK, a row of luxury mansions faced a growing concern shared by many high-end property owners today: the need for dependable home security fencing that blends discreetly with the environment while providing reliable protection. Each property in the development was uniquely designed, with landscaped gardens extending to the rear boundary. This boundary, like many found around high-end properties, bordered directly onto a public woodland. While the setting was picturesque, it brought with it a number of challenges in terms of both privacy and security.

The homeowners in this exclusive row had all invested heavily in the design and finish of their homes. As the woodland became increasingly popular with walkers and dog owners, incidents of casual trespass and unauthorised access to the gardens began to rise. Despite existing hedge lines and tall but basic wooden fencing, the need for a more robust, secure, and aesthetically suitable solution became pressing. Homeowners started looking for the best garden fencing for security that wouldn't compromise the visual appeal of their outdoor spaces or the overall atmosphere of the development.

The Challenge

The central challenge was how to protect a string of high value homes without creating a fortress-like appearance. The fencing needed to deter would-be intruders, maintain clear boundaries, and provide residents with peace of mind, all while complementing the upscale nature of the properties. It had to work with a variety of garden layouts and architectural styles, and it needed to withstand exposure to weather and wear due to its position along the woodland edge.

Another key consideration was privacy. Although full-height walls or solid barriers could achieve this, they risked closing off the gardens too harshly and disrupting the visual connection to the scenic woodland. The residents wanted home security fencing that would act as both a physical and psychological barrier without feeling oppressive or compromising the natural beauty of their surroundings.

Finally, coordination across multiple homeowners added complexity. While they all agreed on the necessity of upgrading the fencing, preferences varied regarding installation. Some clients preferred to use the fencing company's own installation services, trusting the team's product knowledge and expertise. Others chose to go through Approved Installers with whom they already had established relationships. In all cases, it was vital that the selected fencing product could be supplied consistently and installed to a high standard, regardless of who was carrying out the work.

Solution

After thorough research and several consultations, the group of homeowners unanimously agreed to install EuroGuard® Combi fencing as the backbone of their new perimeter security solution. Known for its clean, modern appearance and high specification construction, EuroGuard Combi offered the perfect balance of form and function. It provided the strength and durability needed to create an effective home security fencing barrier while its design allowed it to blend seamlessly with the manicured gardens and the natural woodland backdrop beyond.

The system's welded V mesh design, combined with timber slats, created a contemporary look that did not compromise on privacy. The fencing's height and rigidity were instrumental in keeping out intruders, and its professional finish met the expectations of residents who were used to premium-grade materials throughout their properties. It is also available in Secured by Design and LPS 1175 security rated versions, which are often required by specialist insurance providers and security consultants when specifying fencing.

For those seeking an additional layer of security, the option to add Rota Spike topping proved invaluable. Several homeowners chose to include this feature to further discourage climbing or attempts to scale the fence. The spikes were installed in a way that maintained the fencing's uniform appearance but added a serious and effective deterrent for anyone considering illegal access.

Matching gates were also supplied and installed to ensure consistency across the properties. These gates maintained the same level of security and aesthetic continuity as the fencing itself. Whether for pedestrian access or vehicle entry, the gates were tailored to suit individual property layouts and were fabricated using the same materials and design as the fencing to ensure a similar look throughout the development.

Installation was carried out in two ways, depending on homeowner preference. Several residents chose to use Jacksons Fencing's own installation team, valuing the seamless coordination and accountability this offered. Others opted to engage with fencing installers they had worked with in the past, who happened to be part of our Approved Installer network, including MacDonald Fencing and RFI Fencing. The flexibility of the system and the availability of trained, experienced installers made this split approach simple to manage. In all cases, the outcome was the same: precise, reliable installations that enhanced the appearance and security of each home.

Throughout the entire project, our fencing was consistently recommended, both by the installation teams and by residents themselves. Word-of-mouth praise among the homeowners reinforced confidence in the solution and led to many properties in the row ultimately adopting the same fencing and gate combination. Unfortunately the new fencing made the mansions that were not protected a vulnerability, urging other residents to install and security consultants to specify more EuroGuard Combi.

The result is a development that now enjoys enhanced security, improved privacy, and a unified boundary solution that respects both the natural surroundings and the architectural prestige of the homes it protects, along with a 25 year Service Life Guarantee. The choice of EuroGuard Combi fencing has proven to be the best garden fencing for security in this context, providing the owners with the peace of mind they were seeking without compromising on style or quality.

Having been specialists in garden fencing since 1947 and adding steel fencing to our portfolio in the 80s, we are well poised to offer the best of both worlds. If you're looking for other types of garden security fencing, visit our domestic website Jacksons Fencing.
